

Public Awareness Activity

We want to increase the visibility of our diverse community of accelerator physicists and their contribution to science through Wikipedia.

Our Aim

- Involve as many people as possible.
- Improve and create Wikipedia content for accelerator physicists, sciences and facilities.
- Make our physicists visible and noted for their contributions in science.
- Ensure a diverse range of Accelerators Physicists and Engineers are recognised.

Getting Started

- Create a Wikipedia account
- Join our project so that we can track our combined progress
- Start small, add to an existing article.
- Once you're comfortable, write a full article.
- There's a helpful guide with more info on the website and project page.

The article that you're looking for doesn't exist.

You can create it, but...

- Before you create an article, you should read this guide.
- New to Wikipedia? See the contributing to Wikipedia page for everything you need to know to get started.
- Need interactive help? You can ask questions at the Teahouse, help desk or through live chat.

There are different ways to edit Wikipedia:

Sandbox

Ready to try editing? You can experiment in your own sandbox to get a feel for editing Wikipedia. This is a great place to start without affecting live articles.

Your contribution should be...

- Your original work
- Referenced with reliable sources
- Written with a neutral point of view
- Meet notability criteria
- Written with good faith online etiquette

Notable People

A list of notable physicists is available on the project page.

We'd like your help to expand this list. A notable person in academia has (one of) the following:

- Impactful research
- Received a prestigious academic award
- Been elected to prestigious scholarly society
- Held a named chair appointment
